CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

1.1 Background

In Indonesia, English is taught and learned as a foreign language due to the fact that Indonesian government, since its independence, has acknowledged English as an influential language in the world, particularly for international communication. Therefore, the government has decided that English becoming a compulsory subject starting from junior high school (Nurkamto, 2003). Based on the decree of the Ministry of Education and Culture No. 060/U/1993 dated 25 February 2005 and the 1989 constitution about the System of National Education, expressing that the final goal of the English instruction at the elementary school that the aims of teaching English in Indonesia school is it to enable the students to be functionally proficient in English in the globalization era (Rachmajanti, 2008).

Yet, teaching English as a foreign language is not easy. Especially, in a place that has limited exposure to English (Khan, 2011). In particular case of English teaching in Indonesia, both teachers and students still encounter many problems during the teaching and learning process. The difficulties faced by students of English as a foreign language is the lack of pronunciation at normal speed through listening material (Hasan, 2000). Furthermore, students usually have difficulties in understanding reading texts due to students’ lack of knowledge about reading materials, and they do not know how to relate the ideas between sentences (Rahmawati, 2011). As for speaking, the difficulties that have been often faced by students caused by the lack of vocabulary (Megawati & Mandarani, 2016), while for the problem encountered by students in learning to write are organizing idea, lack of vocabulary and grammar accuracy (Nurgiantoro, 2001).

Responding to the difficulties that students encounter in learning English, it is necessary to investigate the challenges encountered by teachers in teaching English. A research conducted by Songbatumis (2017) in Yogyakarta, a developed area in Indonesia, shows that the challenges experienced by teachers in teaching English including lack of English exposure, classroom size, and shortage of English teacher. Meanwhile my study was examined English teachers’ experiences in a rural area.

In general, a rural area is a geographic area that is located outside towns and cities. Mishra (2015) stated that “the rural areas lack good schools having proper ambience and affordability which cater to the changing needs and expectations of the crass. However, due to many factors like geographical, social, economic, political or cultural which cause diversity in educational access, children in develop areas enjoy the high quality educational in which they almost have everything the best education could offer, qualified teachers, and supporting parents. Other less privileged children, especially who are living in a rural area are happy enough to have access even to basic education seeing that factors in supporting good education are not available for them, for instance less qualified teachers, less parents’ support, and limited educational facilities.
Based on the factors influencing the educational diversity in Indonesia, including geographical, social, economic, and parents’ contribution towards English young learners, it is essential to explore more about the challenges faced by English teachers while teaching in those school. The challenges might be very different from schools located in the main city with in the rural area.

This research was taken place in SMP 8 and SMP 5 Merlung which are located in a rural area. Based on the preliminary research in teaching English for young learners (TEYL) coursework in SMP 8 Merlung in 2017, the researcher found it seems that teacher still have challenges considering the rural area. The researcher get information about the school limited educational facilities and less parents’ support. To make sure the challenges in this school because out factor in a rural area and from the side of readiness in teaching, the researcher was asked to the teacher in those schools.

From that mini research above, the researcher now endeavors to conduct a study on researching challenges encountered by the English teachers in a rural area in particular case of SMP 8 and SMP 5 Merlung, and what are their strategies to overcome these challenges.
