ABSTRACT

This study aims to examine the government's policy regarding the status of non-permanent (honorary) employees, which has become a central issue in the effort to reform the bureaucracy, particularly in creating a professional civil service (ASN) based on the merit system. The research seeks to analyze the form and implementation of the policy on the elimination of honorary positions and its impact on their employment continuity. The study employs a statutory approach, case analysis in the City of Jambi, and a literature review. The findings indicate that the government regulates the elimination of honorary workers and their transition to the Government Employee with Work Agreement (PPPK) scheme through recent legislation. However, the implementation of this policy faces significant challenges, including the risk of unemployment and social inequality. Therefore, a comprehensive policy evaluation is necessary to ensure that the principles of justice and the protection of rights are upheld during the transition of the national employment system.
