- Interviewee : Oh, good morning, Catherine. My name is Mimi and right now I’m a master student in National Dong Hwa University in Taiwan, and I’m majoring fine arts education, and right now I’m pursuing last semester in this study program. Nice to meet you!
- Interviewer : Okay, thank you so much! first, I want ask you about your journey when you started writing you manuscript. How long does it take?
- Interviewee : For me it took one year, for the article finally publish, and yeah, I think for the writing process itself took me one year, but the publishing process until the article published it needs like more or less 10 months until it successfully published in SCOPUS.
- Interviewer : That was an incredible journey! When you tried to publish your article to journal, perhaps you got like revisions from the journal itself. How many revisions are required? What are these revisions specifically about?
- Interviewee : I don’t remember exactly how many the revisions need or the publication of articles but as far as I remember I think it took five revisions, I guess? And most of them are related to methodology, literature review and also the discussion part. And for the methodology, I think the revisions is related to the diction that I used is the the journal wanted me to write ore academically and I revised the diction that I used in methodology and for the literature review they wanted me to use the five years latest articles as my references and if I’m not mistaken, in that article I use like more than 10 years references, that’s why the journal wanted me to revised it to used more latest references for the literature review part. And for the last in finding and discussion, they asked me to write it more specifically like more detailed like the findings and also put more supported ideas, supported opinion from the other researchers in my discussion.
